HONJOZO

Honjozo is a type of "special designation" sake - that's fortified with a small amount of distilled alcohol, added into the moromi at the end of the fermentation process. Generally speaking, honjozo sake tend to be lighter and drier than their junmai counterparts

JUNMAI

Junmai or "Junmai-shu" refers to sake that is made solely from rice, koji rice, and water.

GINJO

Ginjo refers to sake that is made from rice at a polishing ratio below 60% (i.e. more than 40% of the rice grain has been milled away) and brewed over an extended period of time at low temperature. This leads to the fruity and/or floral esters often associated with the style.

DAIGINJO

Daiginjo refers to sake that is made from rice at a polishing ratio below 50% (i.e. Ginjo's rice polishing ratio is below 60%) and brewed over an extended period of time at low temperature. This leads to the fruity and/or floral esters often associated with the style.

NIGORI

A sake that has been roughly filtered and therefore remains cloudy.
